AdventHealth Georgia Names Pam Powers-Smith Director of Population Health and Care

Pam Powers-Smith, a respected community leader and longtime advocate for economic growth in Northwest Georgia, is joining AdventHealth Georgia as Director of Population Health and Care. For the past six years, Powers-Smith has served as president of the Rome Floyd Chamber of Commerce, helping strengthen partnerships and advance initiatives that support the region's business community and quality of life.

"I am incredibly excited to join AdventHealth and become part of an organization whose mission goes beyond providing healthcare to truly helping people live healthier, fuller lives," said Powers-Smith. "Throughout my career, I have been passionate about building relationships, bringing people together, and finding ways to make a meaningful difference in the communities we serve."

In her new role, Powers-Smith will focus on building industry relationships and identifying innovative ways to improve employee health and well-being while helping them manage healthcare costs and create long-term savings.

"Healthier employees lead to stronger organizations and stronger communities," said Powers-Smith, "and I look forward to working alongside the incredible team at AdventHealth to make a meaningful impact throughout our region."

"Pam Powers-Smith has been an extraordinary champion for our community for many years," said Isaac Sendros, President and CEO of AdventHealth Georgia and AdventHealth Redmond. "Her ability to bring people together, build meaningful partnerships and create positive momentum for our business community has benefited countless organizations and individuals throughout Floyd County and beyond. We are excited to welcome her to AdventHealth Georgia as we continue investing in the health and well-being of our communities."
